The November 2012 IAEA Report on Iran and Its Implications

The new quarterly report from the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) on Iran's nuclear program, which is now in circulation, finds that Tehran has continued to install more centrifuges for uranium enrichment at its underground complex at Fordow. The November 16 IAEA report says that Iran has installed an additional 644 centrifuges at Fordow and 991 at Natanz, both of which are regularly inspected by the Agency.

However, the total number of operating centrifuges at Fordow (696) has not yet increased, according to the Agency. The IAEA report also notes that while Iran continues to experiment with advanced and more efficient types of centrifuges, it is not yet using them for production-scale operations.

The IAEA also reports that Iran has continued enriching uranium to the 20% level at the previously reported rate and that its stockpile of 20% material has increased moderately—by 43 kg. According to the IAEA's November report, Iran has produced 232 kg of 20% material, of which 96 kg was converted or slated for conversion to uranium oxide powder, ostensibly for the production of fuel plates for its Tehran Research Reactor. This leaves a stockpile of 134.9 kg of 20% enriched uranium in hexafluoride form. In August, the IAEA reported that Iran had produced 189.4 kg of 20% enriched uranium, of which 91 kg was stockpiled as hexafluoride.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Iran's stockpile of 20% enriched material, if further enriched to weapons-grade, is still short of the amount necessary for one nuclear weapon.
- Iran has completed installation of the centrifuges that its underground enrichment facility, Fordow, is designed to hold, but the number of operating centrifuges remains unchanged since the last IAEA report.
- The IAEA report confirms that Iran has not made significant progress on its advanced centrifuges, which are still not ready for full-scale use.
- Construction on the Arak heavy water reactor continues, but Iran pushed back the date that it expects to begin operations at the facility from the third quarter of 2013 to early 2014.
- The IAEA is still investigating possible military dimensions of Iran's nuclear activities and has been unable to reach an agreement with Tehran on a framework for resolving the outstanding concerns.
- There is still time for a negotiated resolution to Iran's controversial nuclear program, if the P5+1 and Iran both exercise greater flexibility and creativity and agree to address the most pressing concerns of each side.
