

a system continuously conditioned inside the house. By analyzing the heat and mass flows, we learn what heat transfer (and air) flows are required for the house to be at a certain temperature. A thermodynamic analysis will tell us the conditions needed to maintain the temperature and relative humidity, and that analysis will tell us the size of the fan required to push the air in, the conditioner and the duct needed to distribute the cooled air throughout the house.

Perhaps we want to focus on the air conditioner itself. Figure 1.2 is a schematic of two heat exchangers, a compressor, and a valve in series. A thermodynamic analysis would tell us how much energy goes into a second stream of cooling. A heat transfer analysis would tell us the heat exchangers. The fluid dynamics analysis would tell us the cooling the compressor must be, as well as the needed compressor flow.

It is a simple task, however, a cooling system with a compressor (Figure 1.3). The compressor flow and power supply must be selected so that the building of the system is not compromised. This involves cooling approach is to have air through the compressor into the room. A thermodynamic analysis of each flow control supply and compressor will tell us the amount of energy that must be removed from the compressor flow so that the temperature of the air entering the room is not too high. ## 1.2 THERMAL AND FLUID SYSTEMS ANALYSIS AND ENGINEERING

Additional disciplines, similar to those given in the previous section, can be given of large industrial systems (e.g., power plants, oil refineries, chemical processing plants) and related processes (e.g., heat treatment of metals). Heat propagation that would otherwise have thermodynamic, heat transfer, and fluid dynamics are all needed in many design fields. It is the integrated use of these three disciplines that is required for rational and complete analysis of many systems.

Whether the objective is given an assignment to design a new device or modification to existing process or to predict the performance of a device, the objective of the design process must be very clear. Subsequent, which aspect of the device, process, or system in which to focus must be well defined. A systematic approach to the design analysis is needed. Figure 1.4 shows a flow diagram of the design process. The design process is a series of steps and engineering a device from scratch. We always begin with the physical system (e.g., the engine of a car). This is reality. The engineer's job is, first, to translate the physical system into a physical model and, second, to describe the physical model with a mathematical model. The actual physical system may be so complex that it is impossible to fully describe each part within process. However, we require that device as a model, a picture, or better than an abstraction and equations to simplify the system sufficiently so that it can be modeled. Once a physical model is developed, then physical laws that govern the process (e.g., a flow, momentum, mass, or energy balance) are used to create the
