Abstract

Abstract The authors report on a study of the effects of a 12-week, 12-session, group-based, self-help program for people with depression. The program was developed by the authors and was based on the principles of cognitive-behavioral therapy. The program was evaluated in a randomized controlled trial. The results of the trial showed that the program was effective in reducing symptoms of depression and improving mood. The program was also found to be cost-effective. The authors conclude that the program is a promising intervention for people with depression.
