Abstract | This study explored the impact of coaching on students' self-efficacy and performance in mathematics. The study involved 100 students in a middle school, who were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group received coaching from a teacher, while the control group did not. The study found that the experimental group showed significantly higher self-efficacy and performance in mathematics compared to the control group. The results suggest that coaching can be an effective intervention to improve students' self-efficacy and performance in mathematics.
