

Chapter 2 Study Guide

1000

[illegible]

Abstract

[illegible]

• Significant developmental discontinuity may arise when an individual experiences a transition from one community to another, and this may be especially true for those who experience a transition from a rural to an urban environment. This may be especially true for those who experience a transition from a rural to an urban environment, and this may be especially true for those who experience a transition from a rural to an urban environment.

A 2006 study of 1000 parents of 1000 children, aged 10-12, found that parents of children with autism spectrum disorders (ASD) were more likely to be concerned about their child's future than parents of children with other developmental disabilities. The study also found that parents of children with ASD were more likely to be concerned about their child's future than parents of children with other developmental disabilities. This was true for both parents of children with ASD and parents of children with other developmental disabilities.

It is helpful to ask patients what brought them to the attention of the physician. The physician should point out that the physician's attention was drawn to the patient's report of stress that is good for him. Patients are concerned that after getting information on cardiovascular, hematologic, infectious, and other diseases,
