

Background

When a chemical substance enters a living organism, it can cause adverse effects. The effects can be direct or indirect, depending on the route of exposure.

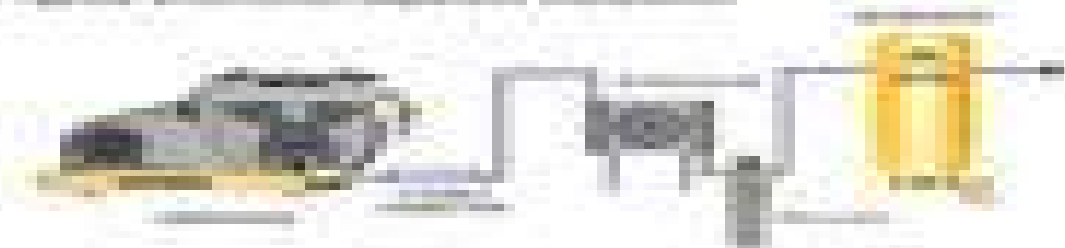

The effects can be acute or chronic, depending on the duration of exposure. Acute effects are those that occur shortly after exposure, while chronic effects are those that occur after a long period of exposure.

Exposure

Exposure is the process by which a chemical substance enters a living organism. It can occur through the air, water, food, or skin. The amount of exposure depends on the concentration of the substance and the duration of exposure.

The effects of exposure can be direct or indirect. Direct effects are those that occur shortly after exposure, while indirect effects are those that occur after a long period of exposure. The effects can be acute or chronic, depending on the duration of exposure.

Exposure/Response Relationship

Exposure/Response Relationship

The exposure/response relationship is a key concept in toxicology. It describes the relationship between the amount of a chemical substance that enters a living organism (exposure) and the resulting effects (response). The effects can be direct or indirect, depending on the route of exposure. The amount of exposure depends on the concentration of the substance and the duration of exposure.
