ing information that is not an RFP is a critical step in getting the right person to deliver the solution to the client. In order to make informed purchasing decisions, general and specific information should be provided to the client. The information should include the client's needs, the project goals, the timeline, the budget, and the selection criteria. The information should be provided in a clear and concise manner, and it should be easy for the client to understand. The information should be provided in a way that allows the client to make a decision that is in their best interest.

The 1988 study found that the most common reason for the use of the Internet was to find information about a specific topic. This was followed by using the Internet to communicate with others, and then to use the Internet to find information about a specific person or organization.
