

Respiratory System Physiology

Effect of Pressure on Respiration

1. How does pressure in the following structures compare with pressure in the atmosphere?
 During quiet breathing, alveolar pressure is less than atmospheric pressure. Alveolar pressure is 1 mmHg below atmospheric pressure.
 Tracheal pressure is equal to atmospheric pressure. Tracheal pressure is 0 mmHg below atmospheric pressure.

2. Diagram of the respiratory system showing pressure changes during inspiration and expiration. Label the structures and the pressure changes occurring in each. Indicate the direction of air flow and the state of the vocal folds during each phase of respiration.

3. What are the structural bases of pressure changes in the respiratory system?
Boyle's Law: Pressure is inversely proportional to volume. During inspiration, the volume of the lungs increases, and the pressure decreases. During expiration, the volume of the lungs decreases, and the pressure increases.

4. The pressure in a closed system remains the same unless it is changed by adding or removing matter. How does this principle apply to the respiratory system?
The pressure in the respiratory system remains the same unless it is changed by adding or removing air. During inspiration, air is added to the system, and the pressure decreases. During expiration, air is removed from the system, and the pressure increases.

Respiratory Volumes and Capacities: Spirometry

5. Spirometry is a technique for measuring lung volumes and capacities. Label the structures and the volumes and capacities measured. Indicate the direction of air flow and the state of the vocal folds during each phase of respiration.
