Abstract

Abstracts—12 American Nurses' Journal articles on stress in 1988, published in 1989, were reviewed. Theoretical, empirical, and clinical research on stress in nursing was reviewed. Theoretical research was reviewed in the areas of stress, coping, and health. Empirical research was reviewed in the areas of stress, coping, and health. Clinical research was reviewed in the areas of stress, coping, and health. The review found that stress is a complex phenomenon that is influenced by many factors. The review also found that stress can have both positive and negative effects on health. Finally, the review found that there are many ways to cope with stress, and that the most effective way to cope with stress is to use a combination of different coping strategies.

The Factor Of Compromise on this page troubles me even if, possibly because I am English rather than American, I find the word "factor" to suggest the idea used in the "Comments On The Developer" pages about making the the collecting the pattern you want to use.
