When an information source has been identified, the following four steps determine if that source is likely to be useful to the reader. First, only the most relevant source material should be used to give the fullest and most accurate account. Second, the source should be evaluated to determine if the source is a reliable source. Third, the information should be evaluated to determine if the information is relevant to the reader's needs. Fourth, the information should be evaluated to determine if the information is current.

It really just seemed to many groups and to our interviewees that there was something at stake with respect to the future of the country. They felt that the government was not doing enough to protect the environment, and that the government was not doing enough to protect the economy. They felt that the government was not doing enough to protect the environment, and that the government was not doing enough to protect the economy. They felt that the government was not doing enough to protect the environment, and that the government was not doing enough to protect the economy.
