11. Chelation of the hydroxyl groups results in complexed species at pH 7.0 (see Fig. 10). The complexed species are also observed at pH 8.0.

These macroeconomic variables have not substantially contributed to explaining changes in productivity. As a result, the macroeconomic model is not able to explain the productivity growth trends in a convincing way. The remaining large share of the productivity growth cannot be explained by the macroeconomic model. This is the so-called "unexplained" productivity growth, which is the subject of the next section.

As a result, the material that comes in parentheses here for the "complement" structure (numbered three and four) is similar to what the government has to do as shown in response to the contract and obligate the request of the government (and part of the response is "indicated" it).

- Fig. 2. Schematic diagram of the experimental setup. The experimental setup consists of a laser source, a beam splitter, a lens, a mirror, a photodiode, and a computer. The laser source emits a beam of light that is split into two paths by the beam splitter. One path goes through a lens and a mirror, and the other path goes through a photodiode. The computer is connected to the photodiode and the beam splitter. The computer controls the laser source and the beam splitter, and it receives data from the photodiode. The computer also controls the data acquisition system, which is connected to the photodiode. The data acquisition system records the data from the photodiode and sends it to the computer. The computer then processes the data and generates a plot of the data. The plot shows the intensity of the light as a function of the distance from the beam splitter to the photodiode. The plot is used to determine the refractive index of the material being studied.
