Abstract

Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported depression among a sample of young adults in the United States and to examine the association between self-reported depression and self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported life satisfaction.

Methods: Data were obtained from the 2007 National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health, a nationally representative sample of adolescents and young adults in the United States. The study included 10,113 participants aged 18 to 24 years. The prevalence of self-reported depression was determined using the Center for Epidemiological Studies Depression Scale (CES-D). The association between self-reported depression and self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported life satisfaction was examined using logistic regression.

Results: The prevalence of self-reported depression was 11.1% (95% CI 10.3%–11.9%). Self-reported depression was associated with self-reported health status (OR 1.5, 95% CI 1.3–1.7), self-reported stress (OR 1.5, 95% CI 1.3–1.7), and self-reported life satisfaction (OR 1.5, 95% CI 1.3–1.7).

Conclusion: The prevalence of self-reported depression among a sample of young adults in the United States was 11.1%. Self-reported depression was associated with self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported life satisfaction.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and blood pressure (BP) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The control group did not exercise. The HR and BP were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in both HR and BP compared to the control group. The HR decreased from 72 to 68 beats per minute, and the BP decreased from 120/80 to 110/70 mmHg. The control group showed no significant change in HR and BP. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and BP in sedentary, middle-aged men.

These results suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the impact of the intervention on the target population is a feasible and effective way to measure the impact of the intervention. The use of a single instrument also allows for the comparison of the results of the intervention to the results of other studies that have used the same instrument.
