based technology to develop autonomous ground control and spacecraft. Research into this area has now evolved into using the concepts of autonomic systems to make future space missions self-managing and giving them a high degree of survivability in the harsh environments in which they operate. This book describes much of the results of this research. In addition, it aims to discuss the needed software to make future NASA space missions more completely autonomous and autonomic. The core of the software for these new missions has been written for other applications or is being applied gradually in current missions or is in current development. It is intended that this book should document how NASA missions are becoming more autonomous and autonomic and should point to the way of making future missions highly autonomous and autonomic. What is not covered is the supporting hardware of these missions or the intricate software that implements orbit and attitude determination on board, resource allocation or planning and scheduling, though we refer to these technologies and give references for the interested reader.
