

From 1990/1991 to 1999/2000, the following guidelines by Wiley, Publication of the International Accounting Association, should be followed:

Changes and additional calculations for presentation should be the result of such changes:

1. It should not be assumed that there is fixed cost component and a variable cost component. For example, the primary cost for telecommunications services should be a combined fixed-cost item as fixed monthly telephone or other long-term costs.
2. Secondary fixed costs are those fixed costs that management can only change in the short run (e.g., advertising). Combined fixed costs are those fixed costs that cannot be easily changed in the short run (e.g., rent).
3. Secondary costs for advertising and other materials are examples of variable costs.
4. Fixed and variable components are separate defined costs.
5. Detailed costs are given in determining other components. The fixed component should be determined as variable. Thus, total component costs to the sales force is fixed.
6. After detailed analysis, managers will judgment to classify costs as either fixed or variable. The total of the costs classified as variable must then be divided by a measure of activity to calculate the variable cost per unit of activity. The total of the costs classified as fixed provides the estimate of fixed cost.
7. The relevant range is the range of activity for which estimates of costs are likely to be accurate.
8. The contribution margin is equal to the sales minus variable costs. The contribution margin ratio is the contribution margin per dollar of sales, i.e., the contribution margin are calculated by the following formula:
9. It should not be appropriate to have the weighted average contribution margin and unit volume contribution (e.g., pounds and computers as an office supply operation).
