

to transport food and water to animals, and (iii) food (like honey) will be transported from the animal's mouth to the nest.

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand what consumers want and what problems they are facing. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This is often done through brainstorming sessions and the creation of a prototype. The concept is then refined through further research and development, leading to the creation of a final product. This process is iterative, with many products going through several versions before reaching the market. The final product is then launched and its performance is monitored to ensure it meets the needs of the market.

1. Identify the relevant stakeholders (internal and external) and their interests. Who are the stakeholders? What are their interests? How do they interact with the organization?

Abstract The authors discuss the importance of the "new" technologies (computerized data processing, statistical analysis, and data management) in the field of epidemiology. They emphasize the need for a multidisciplinary approach to the study of the epidemiology of infectious diseases, and the importance of the role of the epidemiologist in the development of the new technologies.
