and Financial Surveys International Monetary Fund,1993-01-01 This paper provides information on private market financing for developing countries covering developments since August 1992 Progress in dealing with bank debt problems has been based in large part on persistence in the pursuit of stabilization and reform programs Such programs have resulted in strengthened external positions that have allowed debtor countries to accumulate reserves for use in debt reduction operations All of the countries where negotiations are now continuing had at some point suspended payments on medium and long term debt Banks have recognized that resumption of regular albeit partial payments can be politically difficult in the absence of a quid pro quo The group of middle and lower middle income countries with debt problems still to come to terms with bank creditors on debt reduction packages is now limited Many of these remaining countries including Bulgaria Ecuador Panama Peru and Poland have already begun negotiations with creditor banks Economic opportunity amendments of 1977-78 United States.
