Value in Modernity Peter Poellner, 2022-03-10 Value in Modernity examines a historical paradigm in ethics that has hitherto not been identified as such existential modernism Peter Poellner discusses the central claims of this paradigm through detailed examination of the thought of four of its main

exponents Friedrich Nietzsche Max Scheler Jean Paul Sartre and Robert Musil In the case of Nietzsche and Sartre Poellner offers novel interpretations reconstructing lines of thought in their work that have usually been neglected He also offers a new assessment of Scheler's subtle phenomenological version of affective value intuitionism which is a crucial influence on Sartre's existentialism but has so far enjoyed virtually no reception in an anglophone context Musil's philosophical novel The Man without Qualities is interpreted as contributing a highly original version of ethical perfectionism to the existential modernist paradigm While Musil's thought on emotions and moods has begun to receive philosophical recognition in recent years the significance of the philosophical core of his seminal work has so far not been fully appreciated In Poellner's interpretation what we find in the existential modernists is an approach in ethical philosophy that combines a qualified form of affective value intuitionism and a kind of ethical perfectionism This book reconstructs and defends a version of this approach that integrates elements drawn from each of these thinkers supplemented by an original elaboration of ideas only implicit in some of them
