- 1. Statically indeterminate structures cannot be analysed by the method of joints or method of sections.
 - 1.1 Statically indeterminate structures have more unknowns than available equilibrium equations.
- 2. Statically determinate structures can be analysed by the method of joints or method of sections.
 - 2.1 Statically determinate structures have the same number of unknowns as available equilibrium equations.
- 3. Statically indeterminate structures should be analysed by the method of consistent deformations or method of virtual work.
 - 3.1 The method of consistent deformations involves removing the redundant support(s) and replacing it with a redundant reaction (force or moment).
 - 3.1.1 The redundant reaction is then determined by requiring that the displacement (or rotation) at the point of the redundant reaction is equal to the displacement (or rotation) of the structure at that point due to the applied loads and the redundant reaction (force or moment).
 - 3.2 Statically indeterminate structures can also be analysed by the method of virtual work.
 - 3.2.1 Statically indeterminate structures can be analysed by the method of virtual work by using the principle of virtual work to determine the redundant reaction (force or moment).
- 4. The method of consistent deformations is also known as the method of forces.
 - 4.1 Statically indeterminate structures can be analysed by the method of forces by using the principle of virtual work to determine the redundant reaction (force or moment).
- 5. The method of virtual work is also known as the method of displacements.
 - 5.1 Statically indeterminate structures can be analysed by the method of displacements by using the principle of virtual work to determine the redundant reaction (force or moment).
- 6. Statically indeterminate structures can be analysed by the method of consistent deformations or method of virtual work.

This system is designed to capture the essential (200–2000 Hz) lower range of the voice spectrum, to represent the early part of any other speech spectrum. This modification distinguishes the male from the female voice quality. The early speech formants are not captured as well as the later ones. The last segment is an echo signal, representing a short delay between the input to the early and the late part of the system. The early and the late parts are combined to form the final output spectrum. To reproduce the effects of the short delay, the early and late signals are combined in a delay cell, which produces the output.
