Implementing New Methods of Laser Marking of Items in the Nuclear Material Control and Accountability System at SSC RF-IPPE, 2009 For over ten years SSC RF IPPE together with the US DOE National Laboratories has been working on implementing automated control and accountability methods for nuclear materials and other items Initial efforts to use adhesive bar codes or ones printed painted onto metal revealed that these methods were inconvenient and lacked durability under operational conditions For NM disk applications in critical stands there is the additional requirement that labels not affect the neutron characteristics of the critical assembly This is particularly true for the many stainless steel clad disks containing highly enriched uranium HEU and plutonium that are used at SSC RF IPPE for modeling nuclear power reactors In search of an alternate method for labeling these disks we tested several technological options including laser marking and two dimensional codes As a result the method of laser coloring was chosen in combination with Data Matrix ECC200 symbology To implement laser marking procedures for the HEU disks and meet all the nuclear material NM handling standards and rules IPPE staff with U S technical and financial support implemented an automated laser marking system there are also specially developed procedures for NM movements during laser marking For the laser marking station a Zenith 10F system by Telesis Technologies 10 watt Ytterbium Fiber Laser and Merlin software is used The presentation includes a flowchart for the automated system and a list of specially developed procedures with comments Among other things approaches are discussed for human factor considerations To date markings have been applied to numerous steel clad HEU disks and the work continues In the future this method is expected to be applied to other MC A items Computer Analysis of a Laser Marking System Carol Conti, 1980 The Industrial Laser Annual Handbook, 1990

Development of Laser Marking as a Mass Marking Technique, 1993 The first year of work with development of lasers as a mass marking technique provided both disappointing and encouraging results A Coumarin Dye 480 laser was used to mark coho salmon in a variety of body locations and with varying energy levels A bleached white mark was made void of any pigment Areas marked included the nape area behind the head and in front of the dorsal fin slightly above the anal fin the upper lobe of the caudal fin the dorsal fin and on the operculum The mark appeared immediately after being lasered but started to gradually fade after one month and was fairly completely re pigmented after three months Complete removal and notching of the adipose fin was also attempted with a Carbon Dioxide laser This surgical method of fin removal appears to have advantages over scissor excision no bleeding or regeneration and has possible application as part of a device or system which could be employed for mass marking Ultraviolet (UV) Lasers for Aerospace Wire Marking AE-8A Elec Wiring and Fiber Optic Interconnect Sys Install, 2006 Ultraviolet UV laser marking for aerospace wire and cable is now a well established and accepted process The purpose of this report is to provide general information on the technical basis of marking systems that apply UV laser energy to the wire surface This includes materials for UV laser marking the key characteristics of UV

lasers suitable for this application in terms of the mark process requirements and operational requirements the various types of UV lasers which meet the general requirements for wire marking and the generic components of UV laser marking systems Subjects beyond the scope of this report include other wire marking systems not utilizing UV lasers legibility and contrast measurement The contents of this document are for information only It is not intended that it should be used as the basis for marking process specifications or standards which are covered by AS5469 Wire and Cable Marking Process UV Laser This report provides background information and general guidance required by users who need to implement UV laser marking technology for wire identification during the process of preparing wires and cables as part of the process of wire harness manufacture It has been updated to reflect the current state of knowledge and best practice
