

Abstract Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in a community sample of young adults. Methods: A cross-sectional survey of 1,000 young adults (18–24 years) was conducted. The survey included questions about self-reported mental health problems, including depression, anxiety, and stress. Results: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was 15.2%. The most common self-reported mental health problem was depression (8.5%), followed by anxiety (6.2%) and stress (4.5%). Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems in this community sample of young adults is relatively high. This finding highlights the need for mental health services for young adults.
