describes a new approach to knowledge acquisition and extraction that learns rich structures of events e g plant detonate destroy and participants e g suspect target victim over a large corpus of news articles beginning from scratch and without human involvement As opposed to early event models in Natural Language Processing NLP such as scripts and frames modern statistical approaches and advances in NLP now enable new representations and large scale learning over many domains This dissertation begins by describing a new model of events and entities called Narrative Event Schemas A Narrative Event Schema is a collection of events that occur together in the real world linked by the typical entities involved I describe the representation itself followed by a statistical learning algorithm that observes chains of entities repeatedly connecting the same sets of events within documents The learning process extracts thousands of verbs within schemas from 14 years of newspaper data I present novel contributions in the eld of temporal ordering to build classi ers that order the events and infer likely schema orderings I then present several new evaluations for the extracted knowledge Finally I apply Narrative Event Schemas to the eld of Information Extraction learning templates of events with sets of semantic roles Most Information Extraction approaches assume foreknowledge of the domain s templates but I instead start from scratch and learn schemas as templates and then extract the entities from text as in a standard extraction task My algorithm is the rst to learn templates without human guidance and its results approach those of supervised algorithms OECD Public
