Identifying DNA as the Genetic Material

DNA was identified as the genetic material relatively recently, in the 1940s. The initial studies were conducted by two teams of scientists: 1) Oswald Avery, Colin MacLeod, and McCarty's research, in which they used 11 Streptococcus pneumoniae strains. Together, these scientists showed that DNA is the genetic material.

Griffith finds a "transforming principle."

In 1928, a British microbiologist named Frederick Griffith discovered that some of the bacteria that cause pneumonia, the bacterium Streptococcus pneumoniae, have more virulent forms of the bacteria called S. pneumoniae than the others.

Griffith used bacteria that were of the virulent strain, called S. pneumoniae, and the non-virulent strain, called S. pneumoniae. He showed that the virulent strain of the bacteria could be killed by heat, but the non-virulent strain could not.

Griffith conducted an experiment in which he took a mixture of the virulent and non-virulent strains of S. pneumoniae and injected it into mice. He found that the mice died. He then injected the mice with the virulent strain of the bacteria, and the mice died. He then injected the mice with the non-virulent strain of the bacteria, and the mice lived.

Griffith called this "transforming principle." He said that the virulent strain of the bacteria was the transforming principle.

Griffith's experiment

Griffith found that the transforming principle was the genetic material.
