- Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program was supervised by a physical therapist and consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The walking speed was set at 1.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to remain sedentary. The primary outcome measure was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score. Secondary outcome measures included changes in heart rate, blood pressure, and self-reported physical and psychological health. The 6MWT score increased significantly in the walking group compared to the control group. There were no significant changes in heart rate or blood pressure. Self-reported physical and psychological health improved significantly in the walking group compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
