Models, Truth, and Realism Barry Taylor, 2006-05-18 Barry Taylor's book mounts an argument against one of the fundamental tenets of much contemporary philosophy the idea that we can make sense of reality as existing objectively independently of our capacities to come to know it Part One sets the scene by arguing that traditional realism can be explicated as a doctrine about truth that truth is objective that is public bivalent and epistemically independent Part Two the centerpiece of the book shows how a form of Hilary Putnam's model theoretic argument demonstrates that no such notion of truth can be founded on the idea of correspondence as explained in model theoretic terms more traditional accounts of correspondence having been already disposed of in Part One Part Three argues that non correspondence accounts of truth truth as superassertibility or idealized rational acceptability formal conceptions of truth Tarskian truth also fail to meet the criteria for objectivity along the way it also dismisses the claims of the latterday views of Putnam and of similar views articulated by John McDowell to constitute a new less traditional form of realism In the Coda Taylor bolsters some of the considerations advanced in Part Three in evaluating formal conceptions of truth by assessing and rejecting the claims of Robert Brandom to have combined such an account of truth with a satisfactory account of semantic structure. He concludes that there is no defensible notion of truth which preserves the theses of traditional realism nor any extant position sufficiently true to the ideals of that doctrine to inherit its title. So the only question remaining is which form of antirealism to adopt.

The Invention of the Model Susan Waller, 2006. This study of the artist's model in Paris between 1830 and 1870 incorporates three histories: a social history of professional models, a cultural history of models as social types, and an art history of representations of the model in elite and popular visual culture. It takes as its starting point the artist-model transaction, demonstrating that stereotypes of the model that figured in the public imagination were framed both by gender and ethnicity. The book develops a nuanced typology of different types of models. Interwoven with the analysis of the constructed identities of models are accounts of the lives of particular models and the histories of the urban population groups from which they emerged. The Invention of the Model: Artists and Models in Paris, 1830-1870 is an adept exploration of a major issue in nineteenth-century art which will be of interest not only to art historians but also to social and French cultural historians. BOOK JACKET
