QUESTION A 60-year-old male with a 10-year history of type 2 diabetes mellitus presents to the clinic with a 2-week history of blurred vision. He reports that the vision has been gradually worsening and is most noticeable when looking at distant objects. He has no other symptoms, including no eye pain, redness, or discharge. His medical history is significant for hypertension and hyperlipidemia. He is currently taking metformin, lisinopril, and atorvastatin. His last HbA1c was 8.5% 3 months ago. He has no known allergies. On physical examination, his visual acuity is 20/40 in both eyes. His intraocular pressures are 12 mmHg in both eyes. His fundus examination reveals bilateral, symmetric, fluffy white patches in the temporal periphery of the retina, which are more prominent in the left eye. The optic discs and maculae appear normal. His refraction is -1.00 D in both eyes. What is the most likely cause of his visual symptoms?

ANSWER A. Diabetic retinopathy

EXPLANATION The patient's symptoms and physical examination findings are consistent with diabetic retinopathy. The fluffy white patches in the temporal periphery of the retina are characteristic of cotton wool spots, which are areas of retinal ischemia and edema. The symmetric nature of the findings and the absence of other symptoms support this diagnosis. The patient's HbA1c of 8.5% indicates poor glycemic control, which is a major risk factor for diabetic retinopathy. The other options are less likely: B. Hypertensive retinopathy typically presents with flame-shaped hemorrhages and exudates, often in the peripapillary region. C. Age-related macular degeneration typically presents with central vision loss and drusen. D. Glaucoma typically presents with optic disc damage and visual field loss. E. Refractive error typically presents with blurred vision that is corrected with glasses.
