The League of Nations was an international peace organisation set up after 1918, with the key aims of settling disputes peacefully, disarmament and improving the lives of people. This ambitious organisation faced many structural problems, which was often contentious and ineffective. However, the external context in the 1930s played a major role in weakening the League. 1. Why was Wilson disappointed with the Treaty of Versailles? (8 marks)

Reason why Wilson was disappointed with the Treaty of Versailles was because he wanted all countries to have self-determination. The reasons for this were twofold. The First World War was, in large part, caused by the hostility derived from growing nationalism in Europe, which underpinned those countries' expansionist aims as they sought to grow their empires larger and faster than their rivals. 2. Why was Haile Selassie unhappy with the way the League dealt with the Italian invasion of Ethiopia?

Haile Selassie was unhappy with how the League dealt with the Italian invasion of Ethiopia because, after having appealed to the League for help, they were left unsupported. The League employed economic sanctions such as the banning of loans to Italy, as well as the arms, tin and metals, they were reluctant to ban the sale of oil. This was because the League would affect their economy too adversely. In Britain, 30,000 coal miners were already out of work, and America would not support such a sanction. Consequently, the League was unable to put their own economic interests above the very ethics and principle of self-determination.

3. Why did Chamberlain announce that he had secured 'peace in our time' following the Munich agreement? (8 marks)

Chamberlain believed he had secured peace after the Munich agreement because in the meeting prior to the agreement Hitler had assured him that all he wanted was the Sudetenland and the 3 million German speakers who lived there. The Munich Agreement gave Hitler exactly these things, and as a result Chamberlain believed Hitler would be content and compliant moving forwards. Hitler had also been the one to call the meeting which led to the Munich agreement. Therefore, Chamberlain felt more confident that Hitler was interested in diplomacy and wanted to find a peaceful solution as if he wasn't, it seemed unlikely he would have signed a peace declaration with Chamberlain.
