

CHAPTER 1

Objectives

- 1.1. In your own words, what are two differences between partial testing and structural testing?

Partial testing includes: (a) The goal of the test procedure is different. Different product testing is designed to determine the degree of a component's ability to tolerate that some truth would not. Structural testing is intended to confirm functional structural properties that are independent of the system's use. (b) The processes differ in different. Partial testing uses test the system's ability to tolerate a fault in the use of the product. Structural testing uses additional equipment (often designed) to simulate the structural use of the product. (c) The structural testing process is designed to be independent of the system's use.

- 1.2. What are the advantages of structural testing over partial testing?

Structural testing can be performed when the product is in the use of the system. It is designed to determine the degree of a component's ability to tolerate that some truth would not. Structural testing is designed to confirm functional structural properties that are independent of the system's use. (b) The processes differ in different. Partial testing uses test the system's ability to tolerate a fault in the use of the product. Structural testing uses additional equipment (often designed) to simulate the structural use of the product. (c) The structural testing process is designed to be independent of the system's use.

- 1.3. Write the definition for engineering stress, true stress, engineering strain, and true strain. Be sure to show the change in length.

$$\sigma_{true} = \text{true stress} = \frac{\text{load}}{\text{instantaneous cross-sectional area}} = \frac{F}{A} \quad (1.2)$$

- 1.4. Under what conditions is the 0.2% offset? What value is the design benefit of these conditions as material?

0.2% offset is the value of the engineering stress at which the material has a permanent strain of 0.2%. The design benefit of these conditions is that they provide a measure of the material's strength and ductility. The design benefit of these conditions is that they provide a measure of the material's strength and ductility.
