

process, as he could have kept silent (28:1-4), though no person else can be credited for his own action and based on an act effected in the will of Jeremiah (2:1), so he was probably a denouncer of sinning high priest during David's reign. Jeremiah retained his office after the fall of the support of Jehoiakim (2 Kings 24:1-26). Thus, Jeremiah was chosen a vocal seer, served a vocal office, and perhaps also took a dignified public stance. He lived close enough to Jerusalem to understand its people, their worship, and their daily activities. He was far enough removed from Jerusalem that he was not afraid to criticize what he saw happening there.

Jeremiah had a difficult life. His message of repentance delivered in the temple was not well received (7:1-14; 26:1-11); his warnings placed against him (10:18-23), and he endured much persecution in the period of his ministry (20:1-11; 27:1-12; 36:1-17). He finally withdrew to the desert (23:1-4) in a distant province, but apparently had only two converts there. Jeremiah (23:1, 20:1-11; 40:1-15) suffered much, as did anyone who served the king (28:7-13; 39:15-18). These are the only two mentioned in the same book who rejected Jeremiah's prophetic preaching. Though the book does not reveal the role or place of Jeremiah's family, he personally died in Egypt where he had been taken by his countrymen against his will after the fall of Jerusalem (23:1-7).

Some scholars have called Jeremiah the "weeping prophet." While he does occasionally weep for Israel's condition (9:14-15; 13:15-17), and this depth of concern speaks well of him, his response to his weeping was vocal action, including the strongest Jeremiah was a denouncer, defender, long-suffering, and solitary follower of God. His message and ministry were to enable others the more faithful of all Israel's scattered exiles. The apostle Paul certainly moved to Jerusalem to witness the apostle's love (1 Corinthians 9:20). Jeremiah's weeping for his own nation has chartered his model perhaps more accurately to call him "the weeping prophet."

Part of the prophet's work is the comparison of the book that bears his name. It was all that he could do to reveal the truth in the face of what is now called the book of Jeremiah, for that book without reason to cause him to give up the people. The denouncer and teacher continued to compare the book to a revelation of their faith, as well as the power of his own spirit (2:14; 1:23).

Text

It is impossible to know exactly when the book of Jeremiah was written, but some scholars suggest that within a decade or two of the last major disaster in the book, the writer's last day of work. Thus, the book was probably composed by 588 B.C.

Theme

Jeremiah's ministry was given to him that would lead to judgment on sinners, including and including, as well as God's determination to restore and redeem people he loved through the offering of a new covenant.

Persons, Places, and Background

There is no way to determine with any kind of accuracy the time relation of the book of Jeremiah to the events of the book. The book is not a history, but a collection of the words of Jeremiah, and the words of the people in the book.

In the opening of the book, Jeremiah and his wife are seen in the temple, a scene of the temple in which they lived. God's message for the time, and God's message for the future of Israel and the nations.

Jeremiah lived during the time of the fall of Jerusalem during David's reign (28:1-4). He was the last prophet to be called to the office of prophet (2 Kings 24:1-26). The book (2 Kings 24:1-26) marked the beginning of the last years of the nation of Judah. Judah, once a great nation, was now a small nation, and the people were in the country of the nations. The people were in the country of the nations, and the people were in the country of the nations. The people were in the country of the nations, and the people were in the country of the nations.
