There are different definitions of what constitutes a "strong" or "weak" correlation. For example, a correlation of 0.5 is considered a "strong" correlation, while a correlation of 0.2 is considered a "weak" correlation. The strength of a correlation is also affected by the sample size. A correlation of 0.5 with a sample size of 100 is considered a "strong" correlation, while a correlation of 0.5 with a sample size of 10 is considered a "weak" correlation.
