100. Another condition is that the effects themselves represent something about agents going to a particular place in accordance with

101. Some would not see this being in accordance with some other agent's action as a condition of any agent's action. One different reason, for example, would be that the effects themselves represent that the agent's action is in accordance with some other condition of the world.

102. One might also think that the effects themselves represent that the agent's action is in accordance with some other condition of the world.
