Dear Jessie,

How are you my dear friend? I hope you are fit as a fiddle. I am writing you this letter to tell you that I am unable to take part in the music festival this weekends. I have several reasons for this.

First of all, my father is now sick in the hospital. He was diagnosed with dengue fever last Monday. Although the doctor says he is not in a critical condition, we feel it is best for him to stay a few more days in the hospital. My mother is also staying there to look after him.

Also, my final examination is around the corner. I really want to use the time I have to give my studies a final push. I failed my test last month. I want to use this opportunity to get better and make my parents proud. I do not want to disappoint them again. I have made a timetable for the remaining two weeks and I intend to follow it strictly to achieve my goal.

On the other hand, I do not have spare money to pay for the ticket. I am going to Australia next month. Things are not cheap there. I want to make sure I save enough money to go around the beautiful city and buy some souvenirs back. Of course, I will not forget about yours!

Besides, if I go with you, my mother will be worried. She has had enough on her plate with my father being sick. I do not want to make it worse for her. Perhaps I can help out with the cleaning at home so when my dad comes home he will have a comfortable place to rest.

I am sorry Jessie. This is just a bad timing. I hope you understand. If there is another music festival again next year I promise we will go together. Write to me when you have time. I have to go. Mother is calling. See you!

Your friend,
Julie.
