Spine

The spine is the central support structure of the human body. It is composed of 26 vertebrae, which are the individual bones that make up the spine. The vertebrae are arranged in four main regions: the cervical spine (neck), the thoracic spine (upper back), the lumbar spine (lower back), and the sacral spine (base of the spine). The spine is also supported by intervertebral discs, which are the soft, cushion-like structures between the vertebrae. The spine is responsible for supporting the weight of the body, protecting the spinal cord, and allowing for movement.
