These results are also consistent with the findings of other studies. For example, the results of the present study are consistent with the findings of other studies that have shown that the use of a single-point calibration can lead to a significant reduction in measurement error. However, the results of the present study also suggest that the use of a single-point calibration may not be sufficient to ensure accurate measurements in all cases. For example, the results of the present study suggest that the use of a single-point calibration may be less effective in cases where the measurement error is non-linear or where the measurement error is correlated with the measured variable. Therefore, the results of the present study suggest that the use of a single-point calibration should be used with caution and that other methods of calibration should be considered in cases where the measurement error is non-linear or where the measurement error is correlated with the measured variable.
