Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be a safe and effective means of increasing physical activity in sedentary women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions included a warm-up, a low-impact aerobic exercise, and a low-intensity strength training exercise. The program was evaluated using a pre-test and a post-test. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical fitness of the women. The women who participated in the program showed a significant increase in their cardiovascular fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test. They also showed a significant increase in their muscular strength, as measured by the 10-second sit-up test. The program was well-tolerated by the women, and they reported a significant increase in their physical activity levels. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can be an effective means of increasing physical activity in sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract

The following table shows the results of the regression analysis for the dependent variable "Number of children in the household" (N = 1,000). The independent variables are "Age of the head of household" and "Gender of the head of household". The table includes the coefficient estimates, standard errors, t-statistics, and p-values for each variable.

Variable	Coefficient	Standard Error	t-statistic	p-value
Age of the head of household	0.001	0.001	1.2	0.23
Gender of the head of household (Male = 1, Female = 0)	-0.05	0.02	-2.5	0.01
Constant	1.5	0.1	15.0	<0.001

The regression results indicate that the age of the head of household has a very small, positive effect on the number of children in the household, which is not statistically significant. However, the gender of the head of household has a significant negative effect, suggesting that households headed by females tend to have fewer children than those headed by males.
