

Music as a life passion

When you really like something, you often don't give it a second thought. Without you realizing, it becomes a staple in your life – like food or water, and you can't imagine its absence. It's a part of you. That's how music is to me.

I've learned Indian Classical music for around 8 years. I have also been a regular student at my school choir for all my school life. Initially, I used to go to music classes because my parents asked me to. Also because I liked playing Badminton with my friends after the class. So when academics got overwhelming, it wasn't difficult for me to find an excuse to stop learning music. Despite this not-really-interested phase of learning music, thanks to good teachers and my inbuilt need to excel at what I do, I learned quite a lot. I cleared my examination at the junior diploma level and subsequently passed the third year (first part of Diploma) with distinction.

Music was already becoming a part of my life. So when I stopped practicing music, there was a hole. That's when the transition happened. That's when I knew I needed music in my life. From then on, I went back to music with an extra vigor. Soon, I discovered my fondness for the instrument, Synthesizer. I never had a formal training for playing the keyboard yet past lessons in classical music helped me grasp the notes and chords essential for playing the instrument.

Music moved on from being a small part of my life to a passion. The first thing that comes to my mind when I think of why I'm passionate about music is: music is relaxing to me. It takes me to a whole new world where there are no worries or assignments or deadlines! It holds my attention and a probably riveting show I can't stop myself from
