

Lung Capacity Lab

name: JARED
DATE: 1/20/20

Human lung capacity is an issue made possible by pleural cavity - negative pressure in pleural cavity. One way to measure volume of pleural cavity is by measuring lung capacity. Lung capacity can also be measured using a spirometer. This data provides very precise measurements and is collected using a spirometer device.

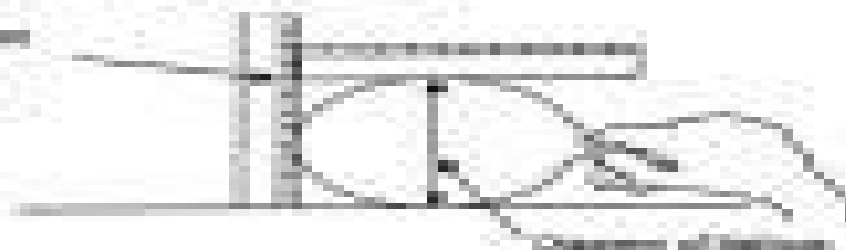

Several different lung volume measurements can be made:

1. Tidal volume is the largest possible amount of air that can be inhaled after breathing a normal breath.
2. Expiratory reserve is the amount of air that can be inhaled in the lungs after exhaling normally (it is the portion that remains inhaled air).
3. Total volume is the amount of air that can be inhaled during normal breathing.

Part A: Measuring

1. Measure the balloon circumference.
2. Use an elastic string or cord. Then divide all the air into one-half the balloon and push the balloon through the process air that is inhaled.
3. Measure and record the diameter of the balloon in centimeters (see Data Table below). The difference between the two measurements is the diameter of the balloon.

Record circumference when the length of the balloon equals the width of the balloon (see table). This is the balloon's diameter.

4. Divide the balloon and the two measurements. Record the diameter of the balloon in your Data Table.
5. Repeat steps 1-4 three times (LAST PLACE where possible). Record all three measurements in your Data Table.

Try Number	Percentage of Volume in Lungs (see table)	Volume of Balloon (see graph)
