Engineering the Environment David P. D. Munns, 2017-07-19 Promising an end to global hunger and political instability huge climate controlled laboratories known as phytotrons spread around the world to thirty countries after the Second World War The United States built nearly a dozen including the first at Caltech in 1949 Made possible by computers and other novel greenhouse technologies of the early Cold War phytotrons enabled plant scientists to experiment on the environmental causes of growth and development of living organisms Subsequently they turned biologists into technologists who in their pursuit of knowledge about plants also set out to master the machines that controlled their environment Engineering the Environment tells the forgotten story of a research program that revealed the shape of the environment the limits of growth and development and the limits of human control over complex technological systems As support and funding for basic science dwindled in the mid 1960s phytotrons declined and ultimately disappeared until nearly thirty years later the British built the Ecotron to study the impact of climate change on biological communities By revisiting this history of phytotrons David Munns reminds us of the vital role they can play in helping researchers unravel the complexities of natural ecosystems in the Anthropocene

Man-environment Systems ,1973 Spatial Cognition VII Christoph Hölscher,Thomas F. Shipley,Marta Olivetti Belardinelli,John A Bateman,Nora S Newcombe,2010-08-09 This is the seventh volume of a series of books on fundamental research in spatial cognition As with past volumes the research presented here spans a broad range of research traditions for spatial cognition concerns not just the basic spatial behavior of biological and artificial agents but also the reasoning processes that allow spatial planning across broad spatial and temporal scales Spatial information is critical for coordinated action and thus agents interacting with objects and moving among objects must be able to perceive spatial relations learn about these relations and act on them or store the information for later use either by themselves or communicated to others Research on this problem has included both psychology which works to understand how humans and other mobile organisms solve these problems and computer science which considers the nature of the information available in the world and a formal consideration of how these problems might be solved Research on human spatial cognition also involves the application of representations and processes that may have evolved to handle object and location information to reasoning about higher order problems such as displaying non spatial information in diagrams Thus work in spatial cognition extends beyond psychology and computer science into many disciplines including geography and education The Spatial Cognition conference offers one of the few forums for consideration of the issues spanning this broad academic range
