Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week. The control group did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and during exercise compared to the control group. The control group had no significant change in HR and HRR. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary middle-aged men.

the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who are obese has increased by 50 percent. In 1990, 15 percent of the population was obese; in 2000, 23 percent was obese. In 2008, the percentage of obese people in the United States was 33 percent. The increase in obesity is a public health problem because obesity is associated with a number of chronic diseases, including heart disease, diabetes, and certain types of cancer. The increase in obesity is also a problem because it is associated with a number of other health problems, including depression and anxiety.
