Imagine how life would be if our society did not have cars. Today, our society is dependent on cars for our daily routines. From transporting our food, clothes, and technology to just going to the store across the street, cars are a very important part of our society. In the 19th century, only the wealthy and upper middle class had access to automobiles, and they only used cars for fancy transportation and to show off their money. This was due to the extreme prices of cars in the 19th century.

With these high prices not many people could afford them, especially not the working class. Henry Ford revolutionized the automotive industry in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. With Ford's devotion to mechanics, he perfected the assembly line, developed cheap cars for the common people, and sparked an era of mass production. Due to this, Ford paid higher and his contributions allowed the common people to have access to cars. Ford's innovation of the assembly line transformed the automobile industry from just an expensive piece of fancy metal with wheels to a productive machine of American society.

Many may assume that Henry Ford invented the assembly line, however, they were wrong. Henry Ford only improved it drastically and used it in his factories to produce better and faster. As Winfield states, "... the assembly line was not invented by Ford.

... he only perfected it to be used for mass production." The assembly line allowed for production to increase in the factories.

This was because everyone had a specific task within the factory. The worker was only focused on the one task they have which cut off confusion and delay in progress. "The assembly line reflects the principle of division of labor, which breaks up complex manufacturing jobs into smaller, specialized tasks," states Amy Sue. The assembly line allowed Ford to produce more as well as to reduce prices, making cars affordable for average families.

Ford was not greedy, he also improved working conditions. He had his workers work less, with more breaks, and he also paid them almost twice as much as other jobs. As Eric Foner states, "Ford paid the assembly line workers $5 a day when prevailing wages were about $2.50.

... he also reduced working hours to 8." With this, workers were more likely to work harder and better, which led to more productivity. The productivity was not done alone, the infrastructure of the assembly line is very critical to the production process.

This was done by, as Robert Sobel states, "... conveyor belts in the assembly line that brought parts to the workers to perform their specific task." All this improved the production rate and it satisfied the workers.

Many may say the assembly line removed individuality, however it brought faster, better, and cheaper production to the Ford Motor Company. With the success of the assembly line, Ford was very pleased however he had a bigger
