GENERAL INFORMATION

The application of this LP (Liquefied petroleum--Butane-Propane) gas attachment to your tractor and the parts used in the attachment with the exception of the pistons, cranking motor, and carburetor have been tested and listed by the Underwriters Laboratories and comply with the requirements of the National Board of Fire Underwriters Pamphlet No. 58.

Liquefied petroleum gas is not usually hazardous but its characteristics being somewhat different than more commonplace fuels such as gasoline or natural gas, require that a somewhat different method of handling and care be taken to insure against accidents. Under normal temperature range the gas in the tank will be under pressures of from a few pounds up to 250 pounds. The pressure in the LP gas tank is determined by the temperature of the liquid and the type of liquid--propane, butane, or a mixture of the two. As an example, normal butane boils at -11°F . and propane boils at -44°F . Mixtures of the two gases have boiling points between these values. As the temperature of the tank and the contents are raised in temperature, the pressure in the tank also increases. Both propane and butane are heavier than air and will tend to settle in a low quiet spot if they should leak out of the tanks. Care should be taken to see that these spots are ventilated thoroughly, if the unit is used near such a location, before any spark or flame is produced.

The safety relief valve protects the tank and opens at approximately 300 pounds per square inch and allows excess vapor to escape.

If a tank is subjected to fire, and the tank pressure rises above approximately 300 pounds per square inch, the relief valve opens, allowing the high pressure fuel to escape and burn. The fuel burns very fiercely as a torch, but since no air can enter the tank there is no explosion. Nevertheless, one should not smoke or light a match around a butane-propane tank that is being filled, any more than doing so while filling a gasoline tank. Safety precautions in the handling of any volatile fuel cannot be over emphasized. Complete instructions for handling this type of fuel should be obtained from the dealer distributing the fuel in your community.

The liquid and vapor service valves on this tank are fitted with automatic check valves which close instantly whenever the flow exceeds the normal amount used to operate the tractor. If a fuel line should be accidentally broken or a valve torn off of the tank, the check valves which are located on the valves, ahead of the pipe thread on the valve, will close and stop the flow of gas, except for a small amount which is bypassed for valve relief purposes. See Reference 3 on page 8. NOTE: Never remove a valve assembly or gauge assembly from the fuel tank without first emptying the tank.
