Question 9 (10 marks)

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand the preferences and behaviors of potential customers. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be innovative and differentiated from existing products in the market.

2. After developing a concept, the next step is to create a prototype. This allows the development team to test the feasibility of the concept and make necessary adjustments. The prototype should be functional and provide a clear representation of the final product. Once the prototype is ready, the team can move on to the next step: creating a business plan.

3. A business plan is a document that outlines the financial and operational aspects of the new product. It includes information such as the target market, sales strategy, and financial projections. The business plan is essential for securing funding from investors or lenders. Once the business plan is complete, the team can proceed to the next step: manufacturing the product.

4. Manufacturing the product involves sourcing materials, setting up production facilities, and hiring workers. This step requires careful planning and coordination to ensure that the product is produced efficiently and at a reasonable cost. Once the product is manufactured, the final step is to launch the product into the market. This involves marketing the product, distributing it to retailers, and monitoring sales and customer feedback.

5. The final step in the process is to evaluate the success of the new product. This involves analyzing sales data, customer feedback, and market trends. If the product is successful, the team can consider expanding its production and marketing efforts. If the product is not successful, the team can learn from the experience and make adjustments for future products.
