Yochelson,2016 John Yochelson was seventeen when he first heard President Kennedy s call Ask not what your country can do for you ask what you can do for your country Responding to the call to public service he had a front row seat from the mid 1970s through the mid 1990s when the power game in Washington was played across party lines Loving and Leaving Washington is his inside account of the lives of public servants from the perspective of a lifelong moderate The Center for Strategic and International Studies brought Yochelson into close contact with such heavyweights as Henry Kissinger and Federal Reserve chairman Paul Volcker work with the Council on Competitiveness kept him at the center of action But the rise of bare knuckled partisanship soured him on DC In 2001 he left power politics to fight for a cause that he believed in launching a San Diego based nonprofit to increase the participation of women and underrepresented minorities in science and engineering Funding realities and family ties however drew him back to the Beltway The bittersweet experience of disengaging from and returning to Washington prompted Yochelson s candid look at the loss of middle ground in U S politics and the decline of public trust in government In this illuminating memoir he reflects on the current generation s dedication to their country and considers the rewards limitations and uncertain future of public service Inside Cambodian Insurgency Daniel Bultmann,2016-05-23 There are many different types of power practice directed towards making soldiers obedient and disciplined inside the field of insurgency While some commanders punish by inflicting physical pain others use re educative methods While some prepare soldiers by using close knit combat simulations others send their subordinates immediately into battle While these variations cannot fully be explained by the ideological set up of different groups or by their political orientation the basic assumption of the study is that they nevertheless do not emerge at random This book puts forth that the type of power being utilised depends on the habitus of the respective commander and as a result becomes socially differentiated Furthermore power practices are shaped by the classificatory discourse of commanders and their soldiers on good soldierhood and leadership The study found multiple habitus groups inside the field of insurgency each with a distinctive classificatory discourse and a corresponding power type at work While commanders shaped the dominating power practices such as military trainings indoctrination systems of rewards and punishments etc low ranking soldiers took active part in supporting or undermining power according to their own habitus formation This book helps professionals in this area to understand better the types of power practice inside insurgencies It is also a useful guide to students and academics interested in peace and conflict studies sociology and Southeast Asia
