Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measurements of weight, body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measurements of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in weight, BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. It also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The control group did not show any significant changes in physical or psychological health. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract. In a series of experiments, we examined the effects of the type of feedback (verbal or nonverbal) and the type of reward (extrinsic or intrinsic) on the performance of a simple task. The results showed that verbal feedback had a positive effect on performance, while nonverbal feedback had a negative effect. Extrinsic rewards had a positive effect on performance, while intrinsic rewards had a negative effect. The interaction between the type of feedback and the type of reward was also examined. The results showed that the combination of verbal feedback and extrinsic rewards had the most positive effect on performance.
