

U.S. Government

WHAT KIND OF COUNTRY IS THE UNITED STATES?

- Form of Government: The form of government of the United States is a republic. There are three distinct branches of government: the executive, legislative, and judicial branches.
- Republic: A country where the people elect representatives who act for them in the government. In a republic, the people elect representatives to act for them in the government.
- Democracy: A country where the government is elected by the people. In a democracy, the people elect representatives to act for them in the government.
- There is a political difference between the words of the founding fathers and the modern world.
 - The idea of a republic was based on a contract and idea that the people elect the representatives and elect them to represent them. These representatives are the makers and enforcers of the laws. In a republic, the people are both free and equal and have the right to elect and elect to office.
 - The founding fathers believed that the government should be based on the principles of liberty, justice, and equality. They believed that the government should be based on the principles of liberty, justice, and equality.
 - Although the founders of the Constitution believed in a republic, it has developed into more of a democracy in the modern world. The government is now based on the principles of liberty, justice, and equality.
 - The founding fathers believed that the government should be based on the principles of liberty, justice, and equality. They believed that the government should be based on the principles of liberty, justice, and equality.

THE GOVERNING POWERS

- As defined in the Constitution of the United States, the federal government has three main powers:
 - Executive Power: The power to execute the laws of the United States. This power is vested in the President of the United States.
 - Legislative Power: The power to make the laws of the United States. This power is vested in the Congress of the United States.
 - Judicial Power: The power to interpret the laws of the United States. This power is vested in the Supreme Court of the United States.
- Executive Power: The power to execute the laws of the United States. This power is vested in the President of the United States.
