

CAPITAL BUDGETING FUNDAMENTALS

Capital Expenditures and Depreciation

HomeNet also requires $7.5 million in equipment that will be required to allow third-party manufacturers to upload the specifications and verify the compatibility of any new Internet-ready appliances that they might produce. To encourage the development of compatible products and provide service for existing customers, Linksys expects to continue to operate this equipment even after they phase out the current version of the product. Recall from your basic accounting that while investments in plant, property, and equipment are a cash expense, they are not directly listed as expenses when calculating earnings. Instead, the firm deducts a fraction of the cost of these items each year as depreciation. Several different methods are used to compute depreciation. The simplest method is straight-line depreciation, in which the asset's cost (less any expected salvage value) is divided equally over its estimated useful life. If we assume the equipment is purchased at the end of year 0, and then use straight-line depreciation over a five-year life for the new equipment, HomeNet's depreciation expense is $1.5 million per year in years 1 through 5.2 Deducting these depreciation expenses leads to the forecast for HomeNet's earnings before interest and taxes (EBIT) shown in line 7 of Table 8.1. This treatment of capital expenditures is one of the key reasons why earnings are not an accurate representation of cash flows.

TABLE 8.1
SPREADSHEET

HomeNet's Incremental Earnings Forecast

	Year	0	1	2	3	4	5
Incremental Earnings Forecast ($000s)
1 Sales	—	26,000	26,000	26,000	26,000	26,000	—
2 Cost of Goods Sold	—	(11,000)	(11,000)	(11,000)	(11,000)	(11,000)	—
3 Gross Profit	—	15,000	15,000	15,000	15,000	15,000	—
4 Selling, General, and Administrative	—	(2,800)	(2,800)	(2,800)	(2,800)	(2,800)	—
5 Research and Development	(15,000)	—	—	—	—	—	—
6 Depreciation	—	(1,500)	(1,500)	(1,500)	(1,500)	(1,500)	(1,500)
7 EBIT	(15,000)	10,700	10,700	10,700	10,700	10,700	(1,500)
8 Income Tax at 40%	6,000	(4,280)	(4,280)	(4,280)	(4,280)	(4,280)	600
9 Unlevered Net Income	(9,000)	6,420	6,420	6,420	6,420	6,420	(900)

As a result, cash flows that occur at the end of one year will be listed in a different column than those that occur at the start of the next year, even though they may occur only weeks apart. When additional precision is required, cash flows are often estimated on a quarterly or monthly basis.

Recall that although new product sales have ceased, the equipment will remain in use in year 5. Note also that we list depreciation expenses separately rather than include them with other expenses (i.e., COGS, SG&A, and R&D are "clean" and do not include non-cash expenses. Using clean expenses is preferred in financial models.)

Interest Expenses

We know that to compute a firm's net income, we must first deduct interest expenses from EBIT. When evaluating a capital budgeting decision like the HomeNet project, however, we generally do not include interest expenses. Any incremental interest expenses will be related to the firm's decision regarding how to finance the project. Here we wish to evaluate the project on its own, separate from the financing decision. Thus, we evaluate the HomeNet project as if Cisco will not use any debt to finance it (whether or not that is actually the case), and we postpone the consideration of alternative financing choices.
