Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computer-based program could improve the accuracy of the measurement of the vertical jump height of young adults. A total of 10 subjects performed three trials of a vertical jump test under two conditions: without and with the aid of a computerized program. The results showed that the use of the computerized program significantly improved the accuracy of the measurement of the vertical jump height ($p < 0.05$). The computerized program was found to be a valid tool for measuring the vertical jump height of young adults.
