The Capital Needs of Central Banks Sue Milton, Peter Sinclair, 2010-10-12 Central banks have evolved over many years and sometimes centuries as policy making not profit making institutions and yet they are structured legally and financially like for profit companies of the twenty first century The question is what is an appropriate level of equity or capital for a central bank to have so that it can function for policy effectiveness over profit maximisation without hindrance to the achievement and maintenance of policy goals This collection takes the reader through historical theoretical and factual discussions on why central banks exist and the role actual and intended they have in assisting their home nation in achieving monetary and financial stability The contributions analyse the different ways central banks are funded and how funding arrangements may impact on their independence The objective is to explore these themes first from the academic and practitioner s views those of the economist accountant and lawyer s and then to introduce practical experiences from a range of different central banks in terms of their economic and socio political environments It will be the first time that the theorist and practitioner the accountant the economist and the lawyer come together in one volume The reader will be able to access the full breadth of views on this important subject The main observations are that there is no single quantifiable formula that central banks can use to calculate capital levels Factors to consider are the historical context of central banks and whether capital was ever appropriate to needs at their foundation the cultural social and political contexts and in terms of the presentation of financial statements profit and loss sharing arrangements and what accounting conventions are being used If these are considered alongside the often idiosyncratic mandates individual central banks have a qualitative understanding of what is an appropriate level of capital is achieved This collection will be of interest to postgraduates and researchers focusing on the role of central banks in monetary economics as well as a professional audience of central bankers the BIS the IMF World Bank EBRD and government departments
