Financial Literacy and Stock Market Participation Maarten van Rooij, Annamaria Lusardi, Rob Alessie, 2007 Individuals are increasingly put in charge of their financial security after retirement Moreover the supply of complex financial products has increased considerably over the years However we still have little or no information about whether individuals have the financial knowledge and skills to navigate this new financial environment To better understand financial literacy and its relation to financial decision making we have devised two special modules for the DNB Household Survey We have designed questions to measure numeracy and basic knowledge related to the working of inflation and interest rates as well as questions to measure more advanced financial knowledge related to financial market instruments stocks bonds and mutual funds We evaluate the importance of financial literacy by studying its relation to the stock market Are more financially knowledgeable individuals more likely to hold stocks To assess the direction of causality we make use of questions measuring financial knowledge before investing in the stock market We find that while the understanding of basic economic concepts related to inflation and interest rate compounding is far from perfect it outperforms the limited knowledge of stocks and bonds the concept of risk diversification and the working of financial markets We also find that the measurement of financial literacy is very sensitive to the wording of survey questions This provides additional evidence for limited financial knowledge Finally we report evidence of an independent effect of financial literacy on stock market participation Those who have low financial literacy are significantly less likely to invest in stocks
