

These same individuals, in 1977, were reported as being in a "medium" category of risk. Although the group of "medium" individuals had a 1:1000 risk of becoming ill, the risk of becoming ill for them was reported as being "medium".

There are also a number of other factors that can affect the results of the study. For example, the study was conducted in a single center, which may limit the generalizability of the findings. Additionally, the study was a retrospective analysis, which may be subject to bias.

To get the most accurate picture from any study, it's best to survey all the same individuals in the course of the research. Unfortunately, no one has accurately tracked anyone over the entire life span.

Table 2 shows the results of the regression analysis. The dependent variable is the number of TV channels per 100,000 people. The independent variables are the variables in the model. The results show that the number of TV channels per 100,000 people is positively related to the number of TV channels per 100,000 people in the neighboring country.
