Before comparing within-country results, first Wald tests are used to examine whether the groups are grouped together on the basis of place or upon their time to graduation with your university. Under which, students are grouped into groups based on their place of origin, and then on the basis of their time to graduation. The results of the Wald tests are shown in Table 1. The results show that the groups are not significantly different on the basis of their place of origin, but they are significantly different on the basis of their time to graduation. This suggests that the groups are not significantly different on the basis of their place of origin, but they are significantly different on the basis of their time to graduation.
